JAMESTOWN THROUGH THE CENTURIES

Jamestown is the capital of the remote island of St Helena, situated in the South Atlantic Ocean. This Georgian seaport nestles in a deep valley and retains a remarkable heritage; a 500- year history waiting to be discovered. The town's streets echo with impressions recalling the past – Napoleon walked this way as did the Duke of Wellington, Captain Bligh, Edmund Halley, Charles Darwin and Captain James Cook. Jamestown's overwhelming texture tells of colonial conquest, slavery, imperialist ideals, the age of sailing ships, war and exile. Jamestown has a unique quality; it's a town which brings the past boldly into the present.

1502 On a return trip from India, the Portuguese admiral João da Nova sighted St Helena. The island was uninhabited when he landed on 21st May 1502 - the anniversary of Emperor Constantine's mother, Saint Helena.

1588 Captain Thomas Cavendish, an English explorer, arrives on the Desire.

1589 The Portuguese kept the island a secret and little is recorded until 1589 when the Dutch pilot Johan van Linschoten described in his journal the fleet landing at Jamestown, then known as Chapel Valley.

1659 Island annexed by the English East India Company. The Castle is built and Captain Dutton commissioned to "settle, fortify and plant."

1673 Island taken by the Dutch. Island recaptured for England by Sir Richard Munden.

1700 The population, some 700 individuals, includes soldiers, Huguenot refugees, victims of the Fire of London and there are 300 simple dwellings, mostly in Jamestown.

1774 St James' Church is built near the site of the original chapel.

1829 The construction of Jacob's Ladder, a prominent feature of Jamestown. It comprises of 699 steps leading up to Ladder Hill Fort.

During the 18th century new buildings took on a Georgian flavour, later to be coloured by Victorian embellishment. All these treasures give Jamestown its distinct and unmistakable character.
