We have a wide variety of activities and excursions to offer in the event this should occur, ensuring our guests enjoy their stay at the Reserve.

Weather

The Patagonian temperate rainforest is located on Chilean territory, between latitude 38°30'S to 55°30'S, west of the Andes mountains. It is known for abundant rain the year round and its more temperate summers (hot days reach 30°C). This rainy climate is a result of the humidity blown in by anticyclone winds from the South Pacific which condense thanks to the cold Humboldt current running up the coast. Once it blows over the continent and falls as rain until it hits the Andes Mountains where it dissipates as it collides with dry winds from the Patagonian steppes in Argentina

Physically Demanding

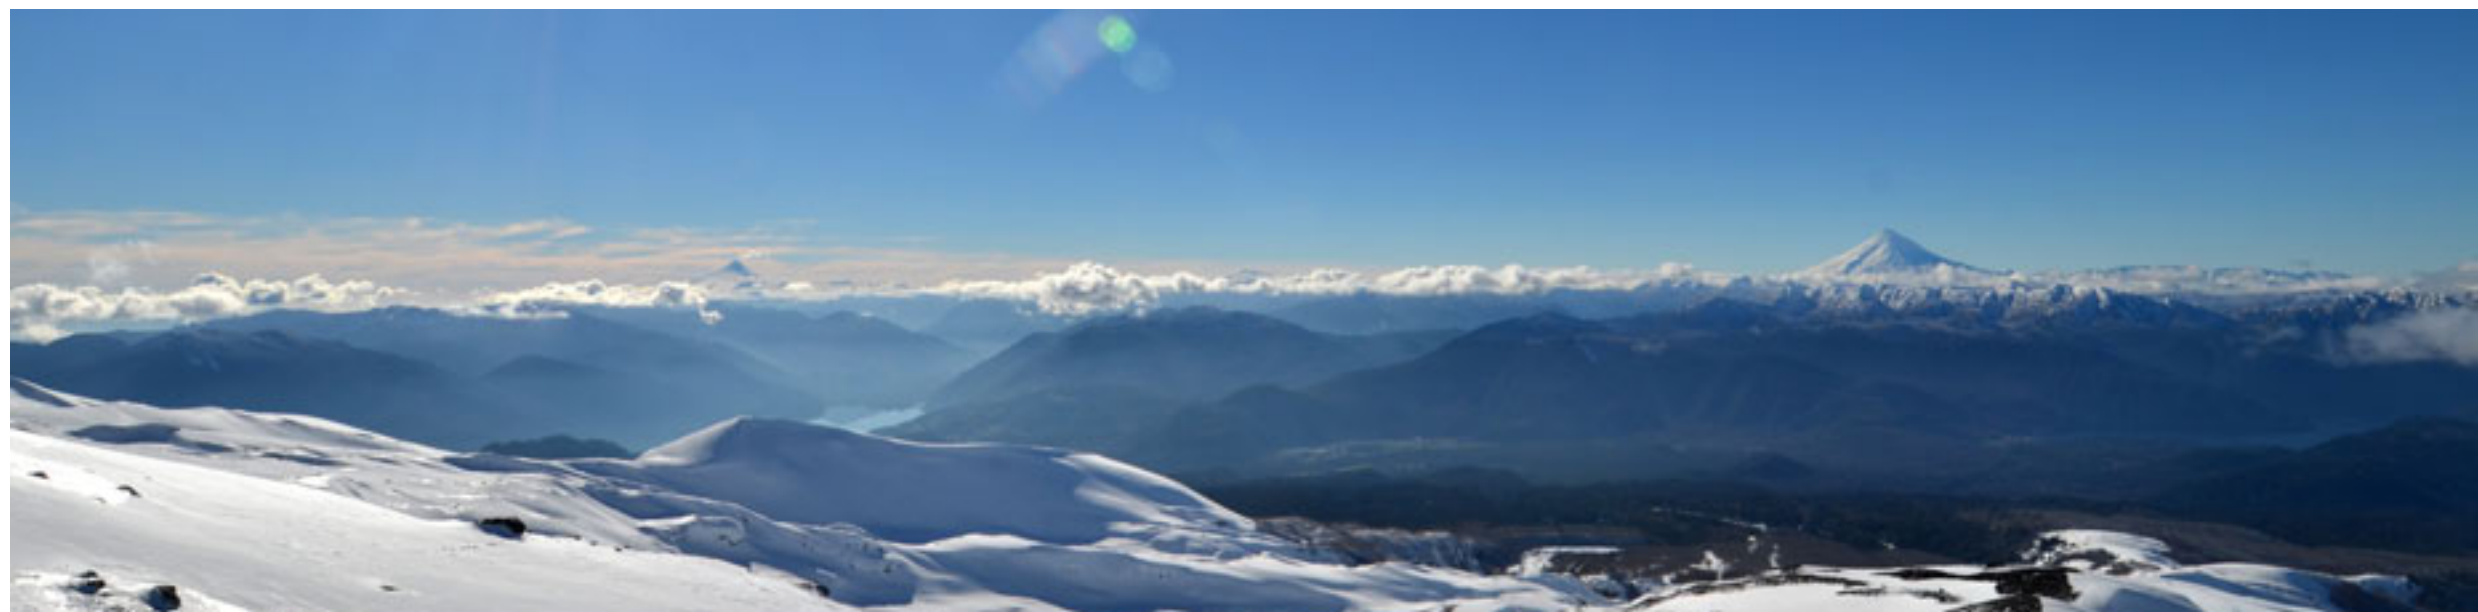

The Immensity program at Huilo Huilo is fully customizable and gives you the freedom to choose the activities and excursions guests wish to go on. To really get the most of many of these activities it is recommended guests be fit, in particular for activities such as trekking, rafting and kayaking.

If you have a special condition that may be considered an impediment or problematic to doing to program we ask that you make sure before making a reservation to avoid any possible inconveniences.

What you mustn't forget

It's very important to come prepared for winter and summer on all trips to the reserve. It's important to bring a comfortable backpack for trekking (minimum 3 liters), trekking shoes, a wind-breaker, parka, comfortable pants for walking, a bathing suit, camera, front torchlight, sunblock, sunglasses, enough changes of clothes for rainy days, hat, baseball cap and/or bandana.

It's important to bring cash should you wish to buy souvenirs. Many hotel services have a credit card system however there are no ATMs for cash withdrawals, should you wish to buy from arts and crafts vendors or other cash only stores.
